Cultivating Kobe's Future from the Woodlands

The nature-rich woodlands stretch out just outside the urban areas of Kobe. If left unattended, the fields and forests will deteriorate and lose their biodiversity. Local residents, students, and many other people have started to try revitalizing and utilizing them.

Project #1: Students who have never farmed before try to farm in line with SDGs !

Re.colab Kobe is an eco-volunteer group made up of students from Kwasei Gakuin University. These students, who have no knowledge or experience in agriculture, are taught by experienced people to create farming plots from scratch.

Project #2: Developing sustainable new specialty products from overgrown bamboo forests!

The Ogo Bamboo Project is a project undertaken by a team of volunteers from the Ogo Regional Development Promotion Council. With the Kobe Zero Carbon Support Subsidy, they try to utilize bamboo in different ways, including making menma (fermented bamboo shoots) and conducting bamboo craft workshops. A large amount of waste generated during processing is also used to make fertilizer.

Project #3: Utilizing wood in public buildings! Local production for local consumption of forest materials

Trees grown as part of the process of maintaining forests and bamboo groves are used in buildings.

Kobe Children's Book Forest: Chairs & signs

#2: Both kids and adults can get in touch with nature

Satoyama Community Sato-no-Wa

Located near the town of Oshibedani, Sato-no-Wa is a community that uses the woodlands as recreational space. It is popular as a place of learning for children, including eating vegetables they have grown themselves and a DIY library. In addition, adults can also experience the blessings of nature, such as through a honey gathering experience and medicinal herb classes that use familiar things in everyday life.

Watch Out for Double Epidemics

There is a possibility of simultaneous epidemics of COVID-19 and influenza, so please get vaccinated as soon as possible. Both vaccines can be administered at the same time. In case you develop a fever and are unable to visit a fever clinic immediately, be sure to prepare a COVID-19 test kit, fever medicine, food, and other daily necessities for convalescing at home.

Free test kits for junior & senior high school students

We are providing COVID-19 test kits that can be saved and used as needed for early detection and early treatment. If you are interested, please apply through e-KOBE.

Municipal Libraries will be Even More Convenient from January 31, 2023

* Some services may be limited to select branches

Easier checkout: You can use not just your library card, but your smartphone or My Number Card to check out books (Pre-registration required)

Search for & reserve books online: You can view book covers and summaries on the "Web Bookshelf" and reserve them. It is also packed with useful functions that allow you to arrange your reading wish-list, check your lending history, and reserve reading and study seats.

Contactless thanks to automation: You can pick up your reserved books at the "Reserved Book Self Pick-up Shelf". And by simply dropping off your book through the automatic return machine, you can immediately check out your next book.

Come See Illuminations that Bring Color to Kobe's Winters

The Sannomiya Station waterfront areas will be bright and colorful.

#1: Kobe Luminarie presents - Cassa Armonica & Treasure Chest of Music

Kobe Luminarie began as a requiem for the victims of the Great Hanshin-Awaji Earthquake and as a wish for the reconstruction and revitalization of Kobe. To carry on that spirit and express our wishes for Kobe Luminarie to return in full, there will be several concerts held at the Luminarie work Cassa Armonica. The Rosone from past Kobe Luminarie events will also be exhibited to serve as a shining symbol of hope.

Period: December 9 - 18

Locations: Higashi Yuenchi Park, Kobe Asahi Bldg., open space in front of SMBC HQ, Chinatown
